Things that I Love.

I love to see the beauteous form, With manly courage blended; The virtuous poor forsaken one. I love to see befriended.

I love the man who scorns deceit,

Nor stoops to guilty pleasures; I love the man that counts his word The brightest of his treasures. I love the man who spurns the knave,

And scorns to share his plunder; I love the author who can read And write without a blunder,

I love the man so nobly pround, Misfortunes cannot blight; The man who braves the jeering crowd And sternly claims his right.

I love the man who dares engage In virtue's noble cause, Though fools deride and atheists rage Against her sacred laws.
